Dear

We just wanted to drop you a quick note because we noticed that we don't handle your renters insurance.

It isn't advertised, but more often than not, when a claim is made against a homeowners policy, it is for the contents and not the home.

Even if you don't own a home you can enjoy the same level of protection for your contents that a homeowner does. In fact, most renters policy's are the same as homeowner policy's except for the coverage's that apply to the home and structures. As in the homeowner policy, the renters policy covers personal property, liability, medical payments and damage to property of others.

Many renters face a greater chance of loss than homeowners. Since most renters live in multiple family dwellings, they can never control what their neighbor does. If a neighbor starts a fire, can you be sure they would have the coverage to protect you?

Whether you have renters coverage or not, we would invite you to give us a call for a no obligation quote, or to answer any questions you have about renters, or other types of insurance.

Sincerely,
